Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

The reference teaches displaying to the buyer any offers to sell currently posted by potential sellers of the desired number of tickets in the desired price zone, the display including a selling price for the tickets corresponding to each offer to sell; determining from the buyer whether the buyer wishes to accept one of the currently posted offers to sell or to post an offer to buy the desired number of tickets at a specified price. (See. Page 1.)

The reference fails to teach the display including a specified selling price and a courier pickup fee corresponding to each offer to buy. The examiner takes official notice that it is well known to those skilled in the art of ticket scalping to provide for delivery services for purchased tickets. Thus, since this is an industry accepted practice it would have been obvious for one skilled in the art at the time to have included this service in the computer electronic interface of the prior art as motivated by the need to increase availability of the tickets.

The prior art fails to teach the reverse auction format of the claimed invention. The examiner takes official notice that this format is well known to those of the art of electronic markets. It would have been obvious for one skilled in the art at the time to have included this feature. The motivation for which would be to increase liquidity and price discovery.

As to the steps of automated payment, the examiner takes official notice that it was well known to adopt credit cards deposits and payment in the art to electronic commerce. It would have been obvious for one skilled in the art to have incorporated this feature as motivated by the need to increase liquidity.
